CHAPTER VI.—(Continued.)

It was hardly day at all, and it certainly was not a good day. Night, of the ordinary sort, was not due for a good half-hour yet, but a gray night had already set in. The air was full of a mellow brightness from the white, icy crystals that filled it. Light could not penetrate it more than a few yards in any direction steadily, but there were momentary glimpses afforded through the wildly whirling mass of snowflakes, of objects far away that, so seen, looked up in exaggerated proportions, with a weird effect of obvious unreality. The wind was violent and unceasing, blowing, as sailors say, "from all quarters at once," and the dry, sharp snow, dashed and swept by it in vast billows and swirls, stung like needle points, the thin, white face of the little porteur. A myriad of unseen hands seemed clutching his thin, flapping cloak and striving to drag it from his shoulders.

Stumbling, sliding, shielding his eyes as well as he could and groaning beneath the weight of his load, which seemed to grow heavier at every moment, he shuffled along down the slope into the valley, now and then glancing furtively back over his shoulder. Until he had left the little grove of maples well behind him, the air above, and around was full of tones, as if from a great aeolian harp; but in the open valley, oppressive stillness, broken only by an occasional angry scream of the wind high overhead, surrounded him.

"A queer-looking little Dick, that," remarked the porteur to Hetty Mulvill, when the door closed behind the book vendor. "And not overly well fixed to be out in the cold, either."

"Yes, and so are we. It's considerably unfortunate that this consigned snowfall should come on the first night of the spelling school this season."

"Oh, the young folks will not mind it—or, perhaps, I should rather say, they will like it, since it will bring sleigh riding, which they esteem a pleasure."

"Well, I guess we'd better be getting ready for 'em. I bring along a lot of candles, and I suppose the old candlesticks we used last winter have got to be fetched down from the loft."

"No, I had them taken down and cleaned yesterday. They are piled behind my desk."

"Good! I'll put them up. Guess you're right. Raccoon Creek gals will turn out well, no matter whether there's a snow storm or not, and we want to get the place bright and cheerful, so's they'll want to come again."

The little porteur had struggled on until the mighty wall of the Devil's Backbone stood squarely up before him, bleak and black, seeming vast and inaccessible. His head was far up in the very home of the tempest; his front covered with a writhing, twisting, quivering mass of arms, the leafless branches of the trees, that threatened and fought with the storm. The highway he was on ran along the creek to a little bridge half a mile farther down stream, across which lay the road that ascended the acclivity at its end. Each moment, as he trudged steadily toward the bridge, he glanced up at the frowning mountain. More and more repellent, even aggressive, it seemed. He grew afraid of it. At length he turned suddenly and ran down a cross road that took him directly away from it, sobbing as he went:

"Not No! I can't do it! Not to save my life! Not even for their sakes!"

CHAPTER VII.

Black township claimed to hold the orthographic championship of Washington County. Three successive winters it had, in a series of spelling matches, held toward the close of the school seasons, defeated each of the adjoining townships, and none of those more distant ventured to contest its proudly vaunted claim to supremacy. Such amiable distinction had not been lightly won, and that it had been gained was due almost wholly to the persistent determination and educational ability of Mr. Parsons. Each winter, almost as soon as he opened school, he took the preliminary steps in the annual campaign. To begin with, he held two or three general spelling contests, to bring out the best orthographic talent of the community, from which he made up his class for special training. Maintaining standing in that class involved really hard work, for it was held only by merit. Only the wisest and weakest members were placed on that list; those remained who were of just confidence in themselves and in one another.

Had not the master, single-handed, the first winter he was here, defeated the neighboring townships! Ever since then he had been "ruled out" from active participation in the matches, it being generally conceded that he was "just the name as a dictionary." Every tricky little word that had no reasonable business in it was known to him. With every class and polyglot of boys that no other teacher could be expected to remember, was upon terms of untrammelled friendship with every able word, spelling and pronounced another, he was more about the mere mechanical side of the matter, but for their real use, that he could give him no hint.

Very bright and cheerful the old school house interior was that stormy night, when people began to arrive. A rude candlestick, made from a discarded butter wheel, prominent in the center of the room, supported a dozen candles; other candles, on the schoolmaster's desk, flanking the dictionary—which was displayed for style rather than use—and on the walls, made the place almost brilliant. Desks were piled out of the way and benches arranged in a double row on three sides of a central hollow space as if for a dance. The stove glowed, and the big pot of water upon it steamed like a sap kettle in sugar-making time. All these arrangements were the work of industrious Simeon Mulvill, the constable. He never knew clearly the line at which his official responsibilities ended, and, being determined to do his whole duty, was always ready for any service that the public interest seemed to demand.

"Early candle-light" being the understood hour for commencement of the proceedings, and the participants being prompt—notwithstanding the storm, which only seemed to stimulate the hearty humor of all—the big school room was soon filled by a bustling, mildly excited throng of friends and neighbors.

Whether it was due to the elevating influence of a study of orthography or to the mollifying effect of the presence of so many pretty girls may not be with certainty ascertained, but the fact is beyond dispute that at the spelling school meetings not even a remembrance of that old grudge between the Camerons and the Mulvills ventured to show its ugly head. And this was really surprising, since at these earlier stages in the work of selection and training, two-thirds of those present would be in fighting humor before the evening was over. Mr. Parsons had a way of using keen sarcasms as pins to fasten in the memories of his class remembrance of the words they failed on, and while his biting speeches certainly had that effect, they stirred up, in his victims impulses of rage that were often hard to repress. The girls sometimes could scarcely keep from crying, but if they had wept, Mr. Parsons would not have minded it in the least. Severely was from his point of view, a necessary means to the end in which all had a common interest, and, after his verbal lash had ceased stinging, even the victims conceded that he was right.

Old folks and young, married and single, maids and bachelors, all took the floor, spelled as long as they could without error, and one by one went down in the struggle for survival of the orthographically fittest. Even the most enthusiastic advocate of spelling matches as an improving sort of amusement could hardly have conscientiously pronounced the exercise altogether free from a flavor of monopoly. Old Cyrus Ramsey made a welcome variation, when he was ignorantly thrown by "philosophy," and talked back, avowing his convictions that the word was wrongly spelled in the dictionary and that it was an estray from some outlandish foreign language, which had no place properly in an English dictionary, anyway.

Under cover of the general hilarity over that episode, John Cameron, finding the gradual reduction of the class had brought him and Hetty Mulvill side by side, seized the opportunity to whisper to her:

"May I take you home to-night?"

With such a thrill of gladness in her heart as made it hard for her to look unconsciously and whisper low, she answered: "Yes."

Only one word, and uttered in a tone no louder than a gentle sigh, but it prolonged itself in waves of delicious music in John's brain and dulled his sense of manner sounds and things, so that he was promptly floored by a word that he knew as well as his own name, and had to sit down. But he didn't mind the temporary defeat. He was certain of being one of the elect, anyway. Parsons knew he could be depended upon in a serious emergency. But he did wish the schoolmaster would not look so confoundedly knowing as if he understood how that word came to be missed.

Rufus Goldie, who had come to grief early in the game, having had more than an hour of nothing else to do than sit still and look at the girls, had made up his mind that Hetty Mulvill was the flower of the collection and that he would escort her home. It made him smile to think how cunningly he would maneuver to secure her company in advance of others less ingenious, who might have the same idea. Quietly he slipped out, when he saw that the exercises were drawing to a close, got his borrowed horse and cutter ready, returned and stood waiting. The instant the class was dismissed, he stepped quickly up to Hetty and, with what he deemed his most fascinating combination smile and bow, proffered the customary formal invitation:

"May I have the pleasure of escorting you, Miss Mulvill?"

"Thanks," she replied, coolly. "My arrangements are already made."

Already! Rufus was not simply surprised; he was astonished. The possibility that his attentions might not be welcomed, even eagerly, had not occurred to him; and his egotism suffered a rude shock. A couple of girls, who had heard both proposition and declination, giggled mischievously, and he knew that his having "got the mitten" would be a popular theme for heartless merriment at his expense. Worse yet, other girls, not wishing to have it said they would accept what Hetty Mulvill rejected, would also "give him the mitten." If he made advances to them, confused and red with anger, he stood aside, sullenly determined to see what her "arrangements" were. In a minute more, he was satisfied—bitterly.

John Cameron, having unblinded his horse and seen that the robes in the center were all right, returned to the school room, with his big driving coat on and his fur cap in his hand. Exultant happiness lit up his handsome face, and he walked straight to Hetty, seeming to be conscious of nobody else, as if she had been alone among trees, instead of surrounded by other young persons. And Hetty, meeting him with a smile, resigned herself to his assistance and care. He helped to put on her heavy cloak; aided in wrapping about her head the great, fleecy white comforter, that was to keep her shapely ears from freezing; buttoned her gloves and tied the strings of the red woolen mitts that covered them. Then he put her hand on his arm and led her out to the sleigh, where he tucked her in warmly among the robes.

Rufus Goldie watched the proceedings, and, metaphorically speaking, gnashed the teeth of his soul. To have been "cut out" by any other man would have been bad enough, but that John Cameron should be his successful rival seemed to him an especial aggravation by malignant fate. Rolling the subject around in his mind it soon began to assume a strange form and color. He actually succeeded in making himself believe that he was in love with Hetty Mulvill. He was not really so; his feeling was wounded vanity, not jealousy; nevertheless the hallucination took an ineradicable hold upon him and, by persistent cherishing, eventually achieved a very strong stimulation of reality, sufficient, in his estimation, to justify the intensified hate with which he regarded John Cameron.

But there was no such false analysis of impulses in the mind of the constable, Simeon Mulvill. He was really and thoroughly in love with his pretty cousin Hetty, and had only been restrained by bashfulness from plainly setting forth that fact to her long ago. Being at least a dozen years her senior, he had made the mistake of too long continuing to look upon her as a child. During at least a year past he had been saying to himself very erroneously that which he had been quite correct in, two or three years before:

"She is too young to marry yet, and it would only scare her to say anything about it; but, when the time comes, I'll be there."

Well, the time had come and he was not there; a fact that he was instantly and painfully conscious of when he met John and Hetty together coming out of the school house door. What he saw in their faces and attitudes in that moment made him know that he had waited too long. Perhaps, for aught he then knew, only a day; but that was enough for all the mischief possible to his cherished hopes. And that very evening his campaign was to have opened! He had formulated what seemed to him an excellent plan for winning her by gradual approaches, commencing by taking her home in his sleigh from that first spelling school of the season, and thenceforth, by weight of established precedent, continuing to do so all winter. By the time spring should come, he would have won her. After the first step, all would be easy. And now the first step had been taken—by John Cameron! The recollection of that name added fuel to the fire of his jealous wrath. That a Cameron should come poaching on the Mulvill preserves, capturing the fairest Mulvill in the valley, was unendurable. Simeon was in a fit mood for almost any desperate deed when he threw himself into his sleigh alone and lashed his horse into a gallop to be all the sooner away from the sound of voices and the sight of people.

Little knew or cared John and Hetty of the evil passions they left behind them as they sped swiftly away, to the merry jingle of the sleigh bells and the confidential "sh, sh" of the crisp, fresh-fallen snow. John could drive well with his right hand, which was fortunate, since his left was needed to hold Hetty securely in the cutter; and she nestled close up to him as if afraid she might fall out.

"I've always rather liked spelling schools," said he, when they were well under way, "but I've a better opinion of them now than ever."

"Why, I hardly thought we did so well to-night as at the beginning last year," she replied, demurely.

"I'm not thinking about that. So far as spelling is concerned, I wouldn't care if the dictionary was kicked over the moon. This is what I'm crowing about, this—right now."

"Sleighing? Are you so fond of sleighing, Mr. Cameron?"

"Sleighing! Yes, I guess so, when I've got the dearest, sweetest, best girl in the world tucked in alongside me."

"Oh! Don't squeeze me so! You're strong as a bear, John."

"Did I hurt you, Hetty? I'm real sorry. Indeed, I am. I didn't mean to. It seems as if I was bound to be dangerous to you every time I come near you. First, I shoot you. You don't know how sorry I've been about that or how I've thought over it ever since."

"Don't do so any more. You were not to blame, and it didn't amount to anything at all."

"And you're sure you haven't got any hard feelings against me for it?"

"Why, of course I have not. What an absurd idea!"

"Will you prove it?"

"Prove it? Why, how?"

"By paying toll without a fight at the little bridge over the run that we are just coming to."

"I don't see what good it would do for me to fight with such a big, strong man as you are, Hetty."

"Oh, Hetty, one look out of your eyes has more power than all my strength!"

"How you do go on, John!"

"Now, we go on together—on the bridge, now."

She did not fight—of course not. If she not already recognized the uselessness of attempting to do so? And their lips met frankly in a long, ardent kiss, the sweet sacrifice Love lays upon the altar of Custom, under the pretty, time-honored excuse of "paying toll."

Newspapers of Regiments.
Most of the British regiments have their own newspapers, published once a month. The news consists chiefly of matters pertaining to the officers and men of the regiment and their families, but the papers also devote regular columns to sporting news, humor, poetry or other departments. All contributions are from members of the regiment. These papers are much in favor among the officers and soldiers, and many of them are very well edited.

Saturday Weddings.
It is noted that more society weddings take place in London on the Saturday than on any other day in the week.

ILLINOIS LAWMAKERS

Clayton B. Crafts offered a resolution in the House Tuesday to submit to the people a proposition for a constitutional amendment to abolish the State Board of Equalization. The amendment as drafted by Mr. Crafts provides that the General Assembly shall abolish the State Board and shall provide by law for raising revenue for State purposes. Gov. Yates sent to the Senate a message announcing the appointment of William Jarvis of Springfield to succeed R. D. Lawrence, deceased, as a member of the State Board of public charities, and Gen. James S. Martin of Marion County to succeed A. C. Brookings of Perry County as a trustee of the southern Illinois normal university. Senator Humphrey introduced a bill to amend the revenue act, to provide for appeals from the boards of review to the County Court, and providing that the board shall not act as an original assessor except in cases where no property is found. Senator Jull introduced two bills to amend the revenue act—one providing that land and improvement values shall be assessed separately, and that changes may be made each year by the assessor on account of any injury to, alteration in or addition to the improvements on real estate; another bill to re-establish the 5 per cent limit by providing that reductions in the assessment may be made when the taxes are extended. Representative Morton G. Smith introduced a bill to prevent corrupt practices at elections. Its provisions are stringent. Senator Putnam in the Senate and Representative Montelius in the House introduced a bill which enlarges the power of railroad companies in respect to consolidation.

Gov. Yates on Wednesday announced to the Senate the appointment as trustees of the Illinois Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary in Chicago, William T. Montgomery of Cook County and Arthur E. Prince of Sangamon County, to succeed J. W. Pettit of La Salle County and L. S. Lambert of Knox County, resigned. Senator McKenzie's resolution providing for the submission of a constitutional amendment which will limit Cook County's representation in the Legislature to one-third of the members of that body, was adopted by the Senate and was sent to the House. The vote was 34 yeas, 12 nays and 5 absent and not voting. The House advanced to second reading the Senate bill which authorizes the South Park Commissioners of Chicago to issue bonds to the extent of $500,000 to finish Jackson Park, provided the voters of the South Town, Hyde Park and the town of Lake vote for the bond proposition. Representative Hughes of Fulton County does not believe in using Sunday as a day for rabbit shooting, and he introduced a bill to prohibit hunting game on Sunday. Speaker Sherman put his foot down hard on the proposal to adjourn the House to March 12 so that some of the members can attend President McKinley's inauguration and others can go to the races in New Orleans. He declared the House would meet every day, ready to transact business, even though the Senate stands practically adjourned until March 12. The Senators signed an agreement not to transact any business until March 12.

Several interesting bills were introduced in the House on Thursday. Two of them called for the employment of convicts to help make good roads in Illinois. One of the convict labor bills was introduced by Representative Drew of Joliet. The measure was drawn up by R. W. Richardson, secretary of the National Good Roads Association. It provides that all able-bodied convicts, not otherwise employed in labor for the State, shall be put to work quarrying, crushing and setting stone to be used for roadbeds. Representative Hughes of Sangamon County introduced a bill providing that counties may provide for the keeping of their own convicts within the county and use them on public highways. Robert G. Hammond, a Democratic Representative and lawyer of Charleston, put in a bill to abolish capital punishment in Illinois. The bill provides that the punishment for murder shall be imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term ranging from fourteen years to life. There is every prospect that this session will be from two to four weeks longer than it has been planned by the Republican steering committee. A resolution was adopted in the House extending to April 1 the time for closing the introduction of bills. The committee on rules had put the "stop time" at March 3; this resolution adds three weeks to the life of the bill introducing machinery. The Senate did not work Thursday and will do nothing until March 12.

There was barely a score of members present when the House met Friday, and Cook County was not represented at all. Nothing was done except to advance two bills. One provides for the disconnection of territory from incorporated villages, which has passed the Senate and is now on second reading in the House. The other bill sent to second reading compels railroads to provide automatic signals at grade crossings and turnpikes in the country. It was called up by Representative Purdum, who was gratified to get the measure on the calendar without reference to the committee on railroads.

Senator Watson held a session of the Senate at 10 o'clock Saturday morning single-handed and alone. He called the body to order, directed that the reading of the journal be dispensed with and then declared an adjournment until 10 o'clock the next Tuesday morning.

The State Metropolis.
University of Chicago students organized a Good Government Club.

Daniel Ryan, 340 Augusta street, locked his mother-in-law in a room and then nailed the door fast, to get rid of her. Police arrested him.

George L. Seavey, former commodore of the National Naval Veterans' Association, who was expelled from the association by the Chicago Naval Veterans' Association, declares he will organize a rival association.

Books in the public library are infected with disease germs, according to official report.

A. W. Greely, a University of Chicago student, was nearly asphyxiated by gas in his room.

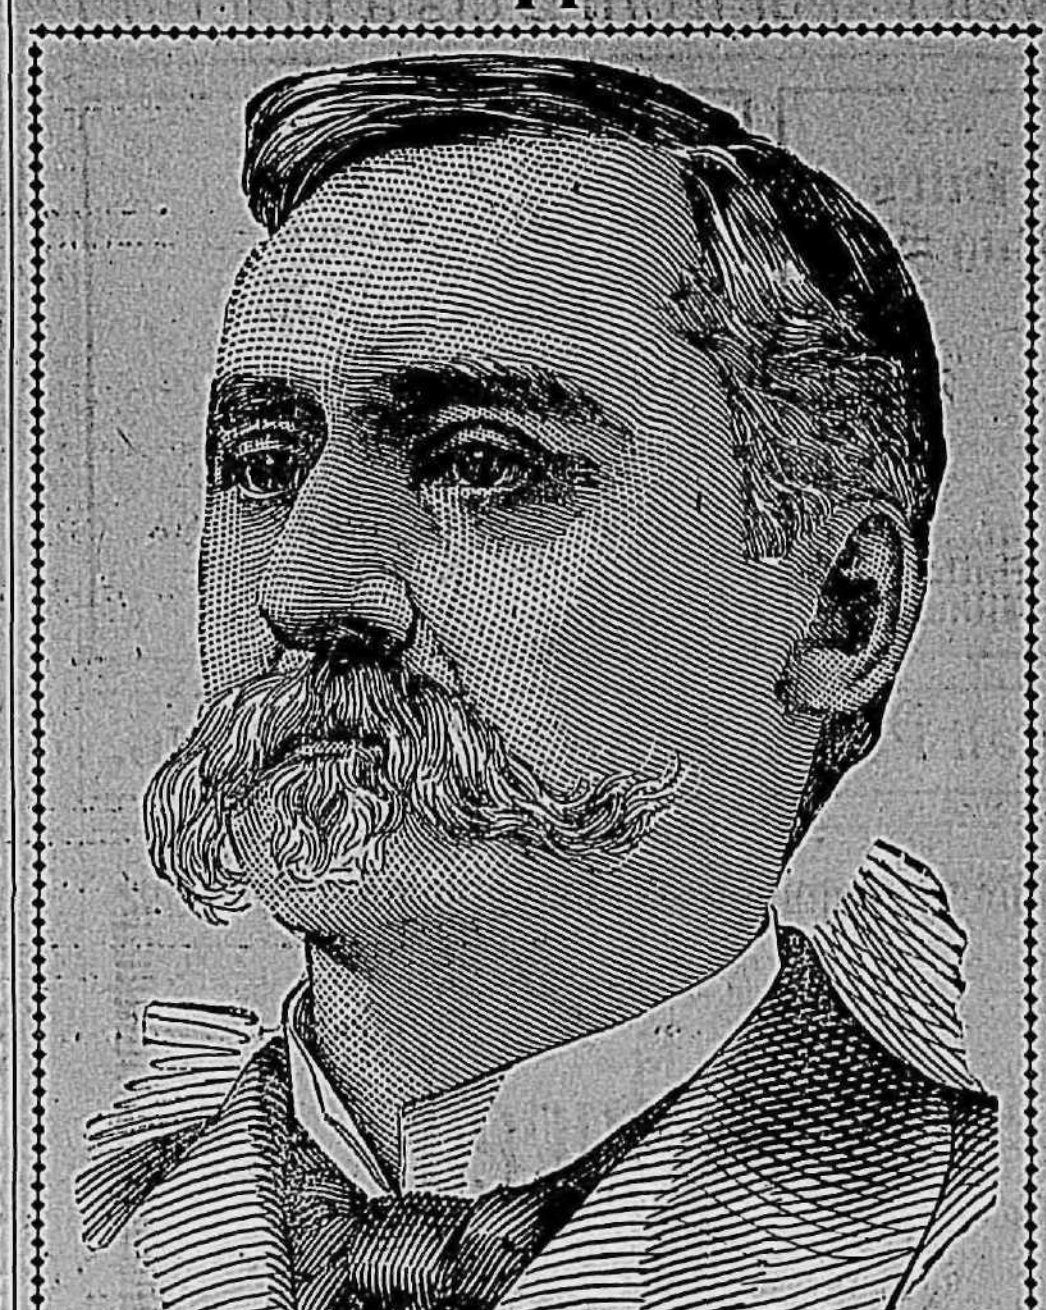

Alarm given by a dog saved a building at 6307 Westworth avenue from destruction by fire.

Peter Glon, 44 Fleetwood street, was paid 50 cents to thrush a stranger and was thrashed.

Albert Hummel and Fred Swartz of Englewood were hurt in a collision at Fourteenth and Clark streets.

A UNITED STATES SENATOR

Says Pe-ru-na, the Catarrh Cure, Gives Strength and Appetite.

Hon. W. N. Roach, United States Senator from North Dakota.

Hon. W. N. Roach, United States Senator from North Dakota, personally endorses Peruna, the great catarrh cure and tonic. In a recent letter to The Peruna Medicine Company, at Columbus, Ohio, written from Washington, D. C., Senator Roach says:

"Persuaded by a friend, I have used Peruna as a tonic, and I am glad to testify that it has greatly helped me in strength, vigor, and appetite. I have been advised by friends that it is remarkably efficacious as a cure for the almost universal complaint of catarrh."—W. N. Roach, Larimore, North Dakota.

No other remedy can take the place of Peruna

Mr. Ed J. Makinson, contractor and builder, 610 Grand block, Wabash street, St. Paul, Minn., says:

"Many doctor bills can be saved by the use of Peruna. I have all my friends taking Peruna, and I have heard a lot of praise from them. Last fall I had a bad cough. I took four bottles of Peruna and it cured me. I am inclined to regard it as a wonderful remedy. I have all my family have, and I believe it is Peruna that has given me such good health."—J. Makinson.

As a result of the changeable climate, catarrh has become one of the most prevalent and universal diseases known to man. Nearly one third of the people of the United States are afflicted with catarrh in some of its many phases and stages. Add to this the fact that catarrh rapidly tends to become fixed or chronic, also the further fact that it is capable of producing a great many other diseases, and we begin to realize the true nature of this dread disease.

So formidable has catarrh become that in every city or town of any size numerous doctors are to be found who make the treatment of catarrh a specialty. Of course a great deal of good is accomplished in this way, but as yet a comparatively small number of the people can avail themselves of this treatment because of the great expense necessarily attached to it.

To such people Dr. Hartman's remedy, Peruna, comes as a great boon. Not only is it more successful in curing catarrh than the treatment of the catarrh specialists, but it is within the reach of every person in this land. Peruna can be bought at any drug store, and is a remedy without equal for catarrh in all forms, coughs, colds, bronchitis, consumption, and all other chronic diseases of the lungs.

Peruna is not a guess, nor an experiment; it is an absolute, scientific certainty. Peruna cures catarrh wherever located. Peruna has no substitutes—no rivals. Insist upon having Peruna. Let no one persuade you that some other remedy will do nearly as well. There is no other systematic remedy for catarrh but Peruna.

Mr. Byron J. Kirkhoff, attorney, 600 N. Gates ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes from 601 Gates ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., the following:

"I have used your Peruna for catarrh and find it a powerful remedy. I feel completely relieved, and I feel that it will benefit others. I gladly give it my endorsement."—B. J. Kirkhoff.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Sore Hands

Red, Rough Hands, Itching, Burning Palms, and Painful Finger Ends.

One Night Treatment

Soak the hands on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of CUTICURA SOAP. Dry, and anoint freely with CUTICURA, the great skin cure and purest of emollients. Wear, during the night, old, loose kid gloves, with the finger ends cut off and air holes cut in the palms. For red, rough, chapped hands, dry, fissured, itching, feverish palms, with shapeless nails and painful finger ends, this treatment is simply wonderful, and points to a speedy cure of the most distressing cases when physicians and all else fail.

Cured by Cuticura

I WAS troubled with hands so sore that when I put them in water the pain would not let me, and the skin would peel off, and the flesh would get hard and break; then the blood would flow from at least fifty places on each hand. Words never can tell the suffering I endured for three years.

I tried at least eight doctors, but my hands were worse than when I commenced doctoring. I tried every old remedy that was ever thought of without one cent's worth of good and could not even get relief.

I would feel so badly mornings when I got up, to think that I had to go to work and stand pain for eight or nine hours, that I often felt like giving up my job, which was in the bottling works of E. L. Kenna, the leading bottler of Trenton, N. J., who will vouch for the truth of my sufferings.

Before I could start to work, I would have to wrap each finger on both hands, and then wear gloves, which I hated to do, for when I came to take them off, it would take two hours and the flesh would break and bleed. Some of my friends who had seen my hands would say, "If they had such hands they would have them amputated," others would say, "they would never work," and more would turn away in disgust. But thanks to Cuticura, the greatest of skin cures, it ended all my sufferings.

Just to think, after doctoring three years, and spending dollar after dollar during that time, Cuticura cured me. It has now been two years since I used it and I do not know what sore hands are. I never lost a day's work while I was using it or since, and I have been working at the same business, and in acids, etc.

He Knew Them

The story is told of a militia regiment—whose reputation was none of the best—on one occasion a detective from Scotland Yard asked to be allowed to inspect the regiment, to discover, if possible, whether a certain manufacturer were in the ranks. Permission being given, the detective, accompanied by the adjutant of the regiment, made the tour of the various companies, front rank and rear rank.

When the official had got to the last man of the rear rank of the rear company he stopped suddenly and gazed earnestly at the rather embarrassed warrior.

"You surely have made a mistake!" exclaimed the adjutant, indignantly. "Why, you have pitched on the best man in the battalion. He has been with us for more than twenty years, and he is our pattern soldier. His arm is a mass of badges, and he is the example of all that is best in the life of a soldier. You surely cannot know him?"

"No," replied the detective; "I do not; but I know all the others."

BEST SPRING MEDICINE

The Palm Given to Dr. Greene's Nervura.

That Grand Jury, the People, Have So Decided.

Used by Hundreds of Thousands in Spring as a Blood Medicine.

Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is indeed "The World's Great Spring Medicine." It has come to be recognized by almost everybody as the best possible spring medicine to take, and hundreds of thousands of our people use it during the trying spring months, to tone up anew the relaxed nerves, and re-invigorate and enrich the blood.

A spring medicine is a necessity if one wishes to keep in perfect health and vigor during the changes from winter to summer. This grand spring tonic, this perfect spring medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, is exactly what the system needs at this season. It not only purifies, but makes rich, red blood; it not only strengthens and invigorates the nervous system, but re-energizes and revitalizes the nerves by feeding them with renewed nerve force and power. It is not only an aid to digestion, but it creates a regular, natural and healthy action of the bowels, liver, kidneys, which in the spring are always sluggish and inactive.

In fact, it is just what people need to make them well and keep them well during these months, so threatening to the health of all, and when it is considered that Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is made entirely from pure, health-giving vegetable remedies, and that people give it more testimonials of cure than any other remedy on earth, no one can doubt that it is the very best spring remedy for everybody to use.

Mr. Gustave Lebach of 337 First street, Jersey City, N. J., says:

"I was troubled with sick headaches, and could not sleep on account of the pains in my head. I was suffering night and day with dyspepsia, could not eat anything, my stomach would sour so, I had to starve myself to have any ease. I had to give up work at last. I was so nervous and miserable, and I was falling away in flesh so that my friends hardly knew me. I tried several remedies, but without avail. At last someone recommended Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I tried one bottle and began to improve. I started in to eat all right; then I picked up my health; my headaches disappeared, and my weakness and sour stomach went away. I used three bottles, and could sleep all night with ease. I used six bottles, and felt like a new man. I can now do a hard day's work without any trouble, and I am as happy as a bird in spring. I was so miserable, always suffering, always in pain, but now I am like a new man."

Use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy this spring, for it is the discovery and prescription of a well-known physician, Dr. Greene, of 35 W. 14th street, New York City, who is responsible for its beneficial action, and who can be consulted free of charge, personally or by letter.

Modern Enterprise.

A merchant who lives on the upper west side of the city was awakened at two o'clock the other morning by the continued ringing of his front door bell. He tried to go to sleep despite the noise, but had to abandon the attempt when a series of shouts coming from the street in front of his house assailed his ears. "Mingled with the shouts he heard the voices of men engaged in a war of words. Jumping out of bed he ran to a window, threw it open and leaned out. There were five men on the street, and seeing him they began to yell with renewed vigor. "What is wrong?" shouted the merchant. The five tried to reply at the same time, and the only word the merchant understood was "fire." "What is wrong?" he shouted again. One of the five got his voice before the others. "Your store has burned out," he screamed, "and I'll give you five dollars more than anybody else for the privilege of pasting bills on the front of your building."

The Poker Only.

An old Scottish lady was being closely cross-examined in court regarding a case of assault, in which her husband was alleged to have played a conspicuous part.

"And now, my good woman, tell the court what sort of weapon it was your husband struck you with."

"Why, said he used a weapon?" snapped the old lady.

"You said so yourself when you gave your husband in charge," answered the astonished lawyer.

"I said I saw him strike me on the head with a wooden spoon, and I told the jury that it was a wooden spoon."

"After the laughter had subsided, the lawyer tried to show her that it was not always well to call a spade a spade. "Well, well," answered the old lady, "you may call a spade what you like, but I'll maintain the my dear daughter that your husband struck me with the poker, and I'll maintain else."

The old lady gained her point.

Gold and Silver Guns.

The Gackwar of Baroda, an Indian prince, had a battery of artillery consisting of gold and silver guns. There are four guns, two of gold and two of silver. The gold guns were made in 1874 by an artisan of Lakha, who worked on them for five years. They weigh 400 pounds each, and except for the steel lining, are of solid gold. They are mounted on gun-carriages of carved wood, overlaid with silver. In 1870, when the Gackwar went to Bombay to meet the Prince of Wales, he took the gold guns with him to salute the Prince, and that was the only occasion on which they have been allowed to leave the State of Baroda.

Dust at Sea.

Those who are familiar with ships know that, no matter how carefully the decks may be washed in the morning, a great quantity of dust will collect by nightfall. On the modern steamship, burning hundreds of tons of coal every day, this is easily accounted for, yet the records of sailing vessels show that they collect more dust than a steamer. On the voyage of a sailing vessel from New York to San Francisco, that consumed ninety-seven days, twenty-four barrels of dust were swept from the decks. The captain was a man of scientific tastes and made careful observations, but could not solve the mystery. Some, no doubt, comes from the wear and tear on the sails and rigging, but that accounts for only a small portion. To add to the mystery, bits of cork, wood and vegetable fiber are frequently found in this sea dust. Where does it come from?

BETTER RURAL SCHOOLS.

The enactment into law of the principles of two bills now pending in the Legislature would open the way for rural Illinois to obtain better schools at lower cost. One of these bills introduced by Mr. Abbott in the House and by Mr. Fuller in the Senate, authorizes school districts of more than four square miles in area to provide for the conveyance of children to and from school. The other, introduced by Mr. Drew in the House, provides for the consolidation of the school districts of a township.

There were in Illinois last year 435 district schools with an enrollment of fewer than ten pupils each. Such schools, unless the teacher be unusually self-sacrificing, evidently cannot provide the education that every child has a right to expect. Such districts are plainly too small and poor to provide good buildings and well-trained teachers. For these conditions other states have found a remedy in school consolidation. Seeing that the effort to bring the school to the child resulted in poor schools they are now permitting the child to be brought to the school.

About thirty years ago Concord, Mass., began trying this plan. Instead of maintaining a school in every little neighborhood district united to build central schools, to which the children were carried at public expense. The result was larger and more regular attendance, better schools, and lower taxes. Montague, Mass., for example, has for twenty-five years carried all children to one central school, and has saved an average of $800 a year by the plan.

Kingsville, Ohio, ten years ago closed four rural schools and brought their pupils in carriages to the village. Thus the cost per pupil for those outside the village has been reduced from $22.75 to $12.25 a year, and the teachers are better and the buildings are more comfortable. Gustavus, O., four years ago had nine separate schools, with a total attendance of 125. A central building was erected and the children were brought to it. The school population has not increased, but last year the attendance was 144, the cost per pupil $1.29 a year less, and the educational results were so much better that the town could not be persuaded to go back to the old method.

These are simply specimen cases of the benefits of abandoning the attempt to bring the school to all the children and of adopting instead the plan of carrying the children to the school. The economy of this plan is here emphasized, because the school is the chief burden upon rural property. The other advantages of this plan are here emphasized because principal of the Madison (Ohio) schools: "The pupils enjoy the advantages of that interest and enthusiasm which numbers bring; tardiness and irregular attendance reduced to a minimum; no wet feet or clothing, or sickness resulting therefrom; better schoolrooms, better lighted, heated, and ventilated; better teachers. State Superintendent Jones of Indiana, in an address to the educators now meeting here, declared the central school plan an unqualified success in his state. It seems full time for Illinois to make similar steps for the improvement of its rural schools. Superintendent Baylis, in his last report, highly commended the plan. It remains for the Legislature to take action.

Their Departure Regretted.

The departure of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Anderson from this city is generally regretted. Mrs. Anderson left for Antioch, Ill., last Friday and her husband left yesterday. Mr. Anderson has been a resident of this city for many years. Most of his life was spent in the railroad business, in which calling he was very successful. He acted as agent for the Rock Island route in 1852 and in 1869 was agent for the old Peoria, Pekin & Jackson railway. He retired from active service as a railroad man about five years ago on account of the death of his son. At that time he was located in Garysville, Indiana, and was agent for the Monon, Vandalia and Big Four routes. Mr. Anderson was very successful in her profession as a physician in this city and surrounding country, and her bright personality attracted many friends during her brief residence among us. Virginia people had learned to regard her many talents as a necessity to our social and professional needs.—Virginia (Ill) Gazette.

SHORT-HORN CATTLE.

A Paper Read by J. A. Thain at the Farmers Institute held at Millersburg.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

In the reading of this paper to you today I shall just touch very briefly on the early history of the Short-horn cattle; how they originated, so far as we can learn is very obscure. Our early historians can give us full accounts of the dirty intrigues of the old-time monarch with a high born wanton, or a court favorite with some attractive weanling, but the domestic animals were below the dignity of history. There is no doubt but what the Short-horns originated on the northeastern coast of England. We know of no improvement in Short-horns until about 1720. It is said they were of extraordinary size, had coarse heads with short, stubbed horns. In color they were yellow red, deep red, pure white, red and white in patches, and roan. Some people think it strange that a Short-horn should be white, but it is and has always been a legitimate color.

Mr. Milbank being one of the early breeders of Short-horns, it is said he bred and fed a five-year-old ox which, when slaughtered, the four quarters weighed 2104 pounds, the tallow 224, and the hide 151 pounds. He also raised a cow that after producing several calves when slaughtered dressed 1540 pounds; she was a daughter to the celebrated Studley sire, he being born in the year 1737. Hubbard, born in 1777, was another great sire.

Robert Colling was the breeder of the American cow. She was brought over from England about 1801, after a few years stay she was taken back, after which she was the dam of Red Rose. Mr. Bates purchased this heifer calling her Red Rose, the 1st, being the first of Mr. Bates' wonderful breed of cattle.

The first general importation of pure bred Short-horns to this country was in 1817, by Col. Lewis Sanders, of Kentucky, and that old state has been the home of the American Short-horn, and from there went the animals that were to better the vast herds of western range cattle. The Angus have been given the credit of this improvement to the range steer. If one would only stop to consider the number of years the Short-horn has been preparing the way for this improvement, before the other breeds came, all would concede to the Short-horns, the stock-growers of this country are indebted to their commanding positions. I have heard farmers say that they would like to own a full-blood to improve their stock, but they couldn't afford to pay the price. Perhaps next day one of these men would pay $20.00 for a scrub to picture him out, he is a mullet-headed, leggy, gawky brute—that after feeding him all the corn he would eat for ten years he would weigh perhaps eight or nine hundred pounds, and the biggest part of that would be a bellow; after keeping him three years, instead of improving his stock they had depreciated, and worst of all, he had been ashamed to own him, so the first time Brown and Strang came around they would buy him for $20.00 and he would be dear at that. Another man who had been scrubby all his life told his boys he was going to attend that ere stock show at Chicago and if he saw some calves there that was better hosen he was going to buy one. He came home from the show and reported them cattle he seed was all right and that he had bought a herd breeder for $100. The result: In the first place he wasn't ashamed to show him to his neighbors, then his steers at two years of age he sold for $60 apiece, was offered the same for the heifers but he had too much sense to sell, but his scrubby neighbor over the fence would sell his steers and heifer for $25 apiece, the buyers remarking "too dear, they don't show the feed."

I have heard it stated it was all in the feed, which I can prove to be all wrong, as I have three grade calves, two of them having just as good a show as the full-bloods, but there is such a difference in them that the poorest judge in the country could pick them out, although the mothers are full bloods. Now some of you, at some time, have thought of improving your herd; you would take the Stock Journal for a time, look at the pictures, read some of it and then come to the conclusion it would be impossible to compete with the old breeders, and didn't believe they would pay as well as taking milk to the factory; wife does most of the milking anyway, and you like the job of going to the factory every morning just to find out the news and visit a little. Wife and ten-year-old Johnnie will have the chores done. Wife just said this morning she wished she didn't have to help milk twice a day, 365 days every year; but you feel it just rested a fellow to sit down and milk, and if milk would only stay up $1.00 per hundred pounds for four or five years may-be you could keep a man. So you keep right along the same old way, in a few years time you find yourself and wife broken down, poor health and poor in pocket. Full-blooded stock, like everything else, have their ups and downs. For the last three years they have been paying handsomely and I believe they always will. I would advise any man to steer clear of fancy breeders; that is, men who always feed to keep their herd for show, having them doped and fattened as some of the prize herds now are, is sure to be detrimental to their breeding qualities. Of course they are nice to look at and we need some of that kind for the shows, just to show people what can be done, but for the common breeder, don't do it, for fat covers up a multitude of sins. If one starts with the best their pocket book will allow in stock or grain, don't let your seed corn be rubbings, your seed potatoes the little ones, get rid of the culls from the worn-out flock, the canners and prairie rooters, have less and better, the worry and work is less and the income greater from good material to start with.

Everyone has their choice of breeds, but for the farmer there is none as profitable as the Herefords, Galloways, Friesians and it will take more than the fat stock show to prove to me that the Short-horn is not ahead as the dual purpose cow, for, with the editor of the Breeders Gazette, I believe in her being made into beef with less feed than other breeds after serving her time at the milk pail.

I expect I am like the saying they have about the old Scotchman, "I can be convinced, but I would like to see the man that could convince me."

Mr. A. G. Hopkins, of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture, in writing of the dual purpose cows, says: "that no one will deny but that the special purpose cow has her place," but we need and have the double purpose cow; that is a cow that will give a fair quantity of milk and butter and produce a calf, and if properly fed make a marketable fat animal. He says he has no hesitation in saying the Short-horn will give us the dual purpose animal. In proving his statement he refers to a herd of 113 grade Short-horns whose average production in October for the whole herd was three-quarters of a pound of butter per day. Then again he states that at the experiment station in Wisconsin, one Short-horn grade in twelve months time gave 506 pounds of butter. Experts claim it takes three or more straight crosses of Short-horn blood to make the dual purpose cow.

No struggling farmer can afford to put feed into scrubstock, and my advice to small farmers, or in fact all of us of the north-west of limited means is, don't go into beef for a drove of milk cows, veal your calves, then sell your old cows for less than you paid for them after feeding to fatten them, but have a few good ones, raise your young stock, let your calves have some of the cream even if your milk check isn't as large as your neighbor's from the same number of cows.

I'm not forty yet, but 15 years along this line has convinced me there is no better way and there is no better breed than the good old Short-horn to help us out of the mire.

OBITUARY.

A sudden gloom was cast over this community last Saturday afternoon, February 23, when the solemn tolling of the bell announced the death of Mrs. Katherine Trafford. Her illness had been so brief that many of her near friends and neighbors were not aware of her critical condition, and it was a great shock to all when the word came that death had claimed her for its own. Katherine Oakley was born July 26th, 1829, in Copake, Col. county, N. Y. She was married to William O. Trafford January 5th, 1850; to them four children were born, two sons and two daughters. In 1854 they came west and settled in northeastern Illinois, later moving to southeastern Wisconsin where the remainder of their lives was passed.

The sons were taken in early youth and the husband about nine years ago, since which time Mrs. Trafford has made her home with her daughters in this place. She was a quiet consistent christian, a kind friend and neighbor, a woman highly respected by all who knew her.

The bereaved daughters have the sympathy of hosts of friends in this sad hour of affliction. The funeral services were held on Monday afternoon at the M. E. church was very largely attended. Interment at Hoerner cemetery.

Funeral Mother, farwell Mother; Pleasant be thy silent rest; Slumber sweetly, God knows best, When he called the home to rest.

A Horrible Outbreak.

"Of large sores on my little daughter's head developed into a case of scald head," writes O. D. Isbell of Morgantown, Tenn., but Bucklen's Arnica Salve completely cured her. It's a guaranteed cure for Eczema, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Sores, Ulcers and Fills. Only 25 cents at Wm. T. Hill's.

Too Easy to Spell Correctly.

It used to be said that no gentleman could be so ill-bred as to spell correctly. Like Napoleon, statesman of the past century were too busy in state affairs to mind orthography. The old duchess of Gordon's rule in these matters was a convenient one: "You know, my dear, when I don't know how to spell a word I always draw a line under it, and if it is spelled wrong it passes for a very good joke, and if it is spelled right it doesn't matter."—Waverley Magazine.

Night Was Her Terror.

"I would cough nearly all night long," writes Mrs. Chas. Applegate, of Alexandria, Ind., "and could hardly get any sleep. I had consumption so bad that if I walked a block I would cough frightfully and spit blood, but when all other medicines failed three $1.00 bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery wholly cured me and I gained 58 pounds." "It's absolutely guaranteed for Coughs, Colds, La Grippe, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung Troubles. Price 50c $1.00. Trials bottles free at Wm. T. Hill's drug store.

VEGETABLE LAMB.

From the China Remembrances a Young Chinese

There is a wonderful species of fern that grows in China called the tatarian lamb. Under this name it was first described by Sir Hans Sloane, who not unjustly claimed that it much resembled that four-footed bit of gentleness. In fact, the plant does illustrate a most peculiar form of vegetable growth. The underground root is thick and decumbent, while the great stem is pushed horizontally out of the ground by four inferior branches of this root, which, answer, of course, to the lamb's four legs. Besides holding the same position as the body of the lamb the stem is covered densely with a soft and pale yellowish wool. Toward the end, which would answer to the neck of the lamb, this stem is declined as though the creature were browsing. In China there is rather an uncanny sentiment associated with the tatarian lamb, as it is there believed to destroy all other plants within its vicinity, but in India, where for many years it has been planted, it is held very highly in esteem. There its thick down is called "the golden moss," and native doctors travel miles that they may gather it to use medicinally for the stopping of hemorrhages. In such dread do those who know it stand of its becoming extinct that a more than ordinary inducement and promise of good faith is necessary before they will reveal the spot where it grows.

Northern Wisconsin Railroad Lands are increasing in value from year to year. Railroads are the great civilizers, for they give the settler as well as the manufacturer equal opportunity to work in undeveloped fields, thereby rapidly settling the country and bringing forth its undiscovered riches. Northern Wisconsin is rich in iron ore, clay, kaolin, marl, timber and fine farm lands. It has made many a settler independent and added to the wealth of manufacturers who have sought this territory. Opportunities have not passed, as there is still a generous supply of land which can be obtained at low figures and on easy terms.

GREAT DISCOVERY

Earth, which is found in the Black Hills.

A new material will soon be placed among the rare things mined from the Black Hills. Fuller's earth is a valuable material found in but few places in America. The finest quality is found in England, where is practically the world's supply. Recently a large deposit of this material has been found in the Black Hills, and it most closely resembles that found in England of any deposit in America. The fuller's earth of the Black Hills contains from 60 to 75 per cent silica, with from 15 to 25 per cent water after being sun-dried. The fuller's earth of the hills is generally found in shallow basins covered by a few feet of surface soil. Below this is a layer of plastic clay from two to six feet thick, and then layers of fuller's earth from two to twelve feet thick, overlying a bed of sand. Fuller's earth is dug out and allowed to remain in the sun, where it undergoes a certain amount of bleaching, turning from a greenish color to a creamy white and losing about 50 per cent of its weight. The United States produces a considerable amount of fuller's earth, something like 20,000 tons per year, re-exports a special to the Boston Transcript. The discovery of a superior grade of the earth in the Black Hills will mean, in a short time, the adding of another rare material to the already long list found in the hills. Eastern parties are negotiating for the deposit of limestone, called by some alabaster, that has been found in Custer county. The stone is found in a thirty-foot ledge, and when it is quarried it is soft enough to be cut into any shape desired. After being exposed to the air it becomes hard and takes a beautiful polish. The quarry is being operated by two Deadwood men.

LIKE RAISING DEAD.

A Groomsman Experiment in a Hospital in Denmark.

Dr. Soren Christensen of Missoula, Mont., was in Missoula recently on his way home after a two months' visit in Denmark. Dr. Christensen was present at a remarkable attempt to bring back to life a man who had died in a hospital at Naestved, Denmark, two weeks ago. The experiment was measurably successful, as resuscitation was effected several hours after the man was pronounced dead. Dr. Maag, who was in charge, was unable to maintain life, however. The patient had died from typhoid fever and Dr. Maag decided to try an experiment. Respiration had ceased completely and the body was cold. Direct massage of the heart was resorted to. The chest was cut open directly over the heart, and through the incision the physician passed his hand and seized the heart. He commenced a series of compressions, and in a short time the heart commenced to work of its own accord. The action of the heart gradually became stronger, but the man had not commenced to breathe. Only after the heart had been acting half an hour did the first gasp for air come. The patient was then assisted in this for about an hour until finally he was able to breathe quite freely. At the same time his cheeks began to assume a natural color. He lay in this condition for another half hour, but without regaining consciousness or appearing to feel the effects of the incision. Then there was a reaction and respiration ceased, although the heart continued to act eight hours longer. A second effort was made to induce heart action, but without result.—Minneapolis Times.

Women as Bird Doctors.

One of the latest schemes of a clever woman forced to earn her own living in establishing herself as a bird doctor. Canaries are her specialty and she has established a hospital where she attends to the ills of these pets. Broken limbs, disordered digestive apparatus, catarrhs and fevers are treated by the woman with benefit to the birds and profit to herself. Other song birds and house pets, and even the repulsive parrot, are treated for their ailments by this bird doctor, who is said to be the only woman in the world making a specialty of this business. So well established is her fame in this direction that she makes visits to Philadelphia, Boston and other cities when called, and has established a regular clientele there, as well as here, among dealers who make the handling of birds an incident to their other business, as is the case at some of the department stores.—New York Times.

Great Britain's Tariff.

Great Britain, after many years of negotiation about the matter, has finally agreed to permit Russia to send a consular to Bombay. Hitherto the issue of an exequatur to a consular representative of Russia in India has been declined, the British government having refused to admit that the commercial interests of Russia in her dependency were of sufficient importance to warrant a departure of that character.

Correspondence Wanted.

Write us if you want to learn what Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will do, or call at our store and get a trial bottle. Ten doses 10c. at Wm. T. Hill's.

Anti Foretell the Weather.

Ants are credited with an instinct for the weather of a whole season. When they are observed at midsummer enlarging and building up their dwellings it is said to be a sign of an early and cold winter.

When you are bilious, use those famous little pills known as DeWitt's Little Early Bismar to cleanse the liver and bowels. They never gripe. Wm. T. Hill.

EMERALD MINES

They Were Lost for Centuries, but Now Have Been Rediscovered.

What are known as the emerald mines of Cleopatra lie in the mountain range that extends for a long distance parallel to the Red sea and a few leagues west of its coast, in a latitude rather south of Sufa, on the Nile, says the Geographical Journal. This, like some other parts of the region—such as the porphyry quarries of Jebel Dokhan—was far better known than it is now, and more thickly peopled, about twenty centuries ago, and only during the present one, so far as we know, have isolated explorers at long intervals found their way into the treasure house of ancient Egypt. When its rulers first used the emerald for personal adornment is uncertain. Whether the large, clear stones which, according to ancient authorities, ornamented the Egyptian temples were really emeralds is a matter of dispute, but as this gem—owing to its regular shape, which is commonly a six-sided prism—and its beautiful tint stands less in need of the lapidary's art than many others, it probably formed part of the regalia of princes at a very early period. That it was known to the Romans is certain, and the mines now revisited used to send their treasures to the gem cutters of the capital. Ever since then the stone has been highly esteemed. These mines of the northern Ethbal seem to have remained untouched since the decline and fall of Rome caused them to be deserted. According to Mr. MacAllister, the workings are only small passages, hardly more than burrows, excavated in the emerald-bearing cyst and sometimes extending for a long distance. Many scattered ruins may also be seen—dwellings, watch towers and tombs, besides those of old settlements. In these, no doubt, the mining population used to live, and the difference in style suggest they were occupied for a long time. Some are mere hovels, very roughly built; others show a more careful construction, while a third group are well finished. Mr. MacAllister also found three rock-cut temples, for the soft stone lends itself to that kind of architecture. He thinks that their pillars, though very primitive in style, indicate Egyptian designs, with traces of Greek influence. One, indeed, contains a crumbling inscription in that language. Broken pottery, sometimes ornamented, is abundant, but there is no evidence that the neighborhood attracted visitors for any but business purposes. Notwithstanding this, there was in those times a settled instead of a nomad population, and travelers once must have been rather frequent, for in one place many drawings of persons, animals and tribal marks are scratched upon the rocks. Some of the figures evidently are much older than others, but as a whole they recall to memory the Sinitic inscriptions which some forty years ago were believed to be memories of the wanderings of the Israelites.

HAPPIEST CLASS.

In a Middle State where Income Exceeds Expenditure.

In writing of "The Happiest Class of People," John Glimmer Speed, in the Woman's Home Companion, advances the theory that the very rich are sometimes more to be pitied than envied. He then goes on to say: "I have told you who are the unhappiest men, and now it is my pleasant duty to speak of the happiest state. Solomon indicated it in his petition, 'Give me neither riches nor poverty.' There is in that, as in most of the Proverbs, both definition and description. Neither riches nor poverty. I need say little more. We all know what the alternative is—that middle state where the income safely exceeds the expenditure. Then a man can be happy, and if he have a good temper and a robust digestion it does not make much difference what goes on around him. He is safe, and for the time being at least his family is secure. The best thing about this happiest state is that it had within it such a tremendously large class. It is not only a man here and there that belongs within it; the men are legion. In this country it embraces all of the great middle class. And the very great majority of them do not even know that theirs is the happiest state; they do not dream how well they are off. Some of them, being wrong-headed men, envy their richer neighbors; some others throw away their valuable sufficiency in the endeavor to get richer; some others get richer, and then are not as happy as they were before. Let those who are in this happiest state continue in it if they can, for the world at large and the country at home has great need for them. They represent the solid honesty which stands midway-between the madness of a too rapid social reform and the insatiable greed of the unscrupulous who look upon the whole world as a gold mine that belongs to them by right of inheritance or purchase. Happy should be the land where this class is very great; and it is greater in the United States than anywhere else in the world.

Loos to Artistic World.

The destruction by fire of the chateau of Beloeil is a great loss to the artistic world. This ancient chateau called up a host of memories of past glory and grandeur, and the loss of its rare collection of historic relics is irreparable. Beloeil was not only one of the finest castles in Belgium or Europe, but was a veritable museum of paintings, arms, objects of art, manuscripts and rare books; its library was of immense value. It was the Versailles of Belgium. Here old Field Marshal Claude Lamoral, Prince de Ligne, died, after having been at all the courts and in all the camps of Europe.—Chicago News.

A Young Girl

May be very old in suffering. She is very apt to neglect the earlier symptoms of disease. Often when she takes treatment it is the wrong treatment for her case. Very many young women write to Dr. Pierce and consult him by letter free. All such correspondence is strictly private, and womanly modesty is spared the shock of indecent examinations, unpleasant questionings and offensive local treatments.

"I suffered with female trouble," writes Miss Anna McGowan, of 1221 Bank St., Washington, D. C. "I tried various remedies but none seemed to do any permanent good. The doctors said it was the worst case of internal trouble they ever had. I decided to write to Dr. Pierce for help. I received a very encouraging reply and commenced treatment at once. I had not used the 'Favorite Prescription' a week before I began to feel better, and, as I continued, my health gradually improved. It is improving every day and I still continue to take the medicine."

Will Practice Here.

Dr. Florence G. Anderson, formerly Dr.
Hall, of Chicago, has decided to practice her profession in this city and has provided an office at her residence near the C. P. & St. L. depot. Dr. Anderson is a graduate of Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital of Chicago, having completed that course in '97. She completed the full course of four years as required by law.
The Doctor also attended a year taking special work at the Woman's Medical College and Hospital of that city and the Medical Department of the Chicago University. Besides the above excellent schooling she also devoted much time and study attending the clinics and hospitals of that city. After a successful practice of two years at 6249 Monroe avenue, Chicago, she was united in marriage to Adam Anderson of this city, and will continue to practice this profession in which she is so thoroughly versed.—Virginia Enquirer.

Regrets Her Removal.

The Woodlawn Times, in its issue of March 24, contains the following item:
"Dr. Florence G. Anderson, who is better known in Woodlawn as Dr. Florence Hall, and who was recently married to Colonel Anderson, of Virginia, Ill., has removed from 6249 Monroe avenue to Virginia, where she will continue the practice of medicine, with her office at her husband's residence. Dr. Anderson leaves many warm friends in Woodlawn, who will be sorry to hear of her removal.—Virginia Enquirer.

SUN'S POWER.

It Is the Greatest Heat That Has Been Produced.

The problem of upping the giant strength of the sun, of controlling some portion of the power and heat so freely given to man, has been passed from the ancients to the moderns through the hands of the greatest men of learning of all times without any adequate solution until the dawn of the twentieth century. The Grecian Archimedes, the Edison of his day, was perhaps the first to handle the question, and to set it travelling down the centuries; Ericsson, the American, and Mouchout, the Frenchman, were among the last to seek the solution, and both succeeded in making the sun operate small motors.
Nothing more was done, says Pearson's Magazine, until Dr. William Calver of Washington invented the panhellomotor, and can now control a greater degree of heat than man ever operated before. The fiercest degree of heat that any one has hitherto been able to make is the 6,000 degree that has been registered in the electric arc.
Dr. Calver is able to generate 24,000 degrees of heat. Of this he is able to control 10,000 degrees with absolute safety, while he is at present at work constructing an apparatus which will easily give him the mastery over the full amount of heat that he generates. With his invention, which, briefly, consists of an arrangement of mirrors to reflect the sun's rays upon a focusing spot, Dr. Calver could burn down a rocky mountain and reduce it to a level plain without as much as lighting a match. Russian iron, of the kind so unburnable that it extinguish-es the fire in the fiercest furnaces, melts under the heat at his control as a wax match is melted by the flame. Tough silver coins or stout glass tumblers become in a moment running liquid in the heat of the focused rays; while with his apparatus he will perforate a soaking-wet plank of wood with a dozen holes in as many seconds.

Preferred Lash to Prison.

Two young negroes who had stolen
some clothing from a local merchant were convicted in Fulton, Mo., recently, and sentenced to four and six months respectively, in the county jail. Shortly the county attorney asked the boys in a jocular way which they preferred, their jail sentences or twenty-five lashes on the bare back.
Each promptly answered that he would take the whipping. No more was thought of it by the officials, however, until several days later, when a note from the prisoners reached the prosecuting attorney, telling him that they were ready and anxious to take the whipping and get their release, and would promise to leave Fulton and never return. They were taken at their word. Constable Garner, who weighs 215 pounds, was hunted up, and the negroes were taken to the sheriff's office, where the big constable laid the lash on their bare backs in the old-fashioned way. Every blow from the ravage made the darkies groan with pain.
